When is the flu shot not appropriate?

Flu shot is not appropriate for people who:

- have had a serious allergy (such as anaphylaxis) from a previous flu vaccine
- have had a serious allergy (such as anaphylaxis) to a component of the flu vaccine (e.g. eggs)
- are unwell (with a temperature over 38.5°C) at the time of their appointment
- are aged under 6 months.

If any of the above apply to you or you are at all unsure, please seek medical advice from your pharmacist or doctor.

I am pregnant, should I have the flu shot?

Please seek medical advice from your pharmacist or doctor.

I got the flu shot last year. Do I need to get it again this year?

Yes. The flu virus is continually changing, and so does the vaccine to ensure protection against the most recent and common circulating strains.

Are there side effects associated with the flu shot?

While there are side effects associated with the flu shot, most are very mild and short term (normally lasting no more than 48 hours).

Very rarely more serious side effects can occur; however, these tend to be allergic (anaphylactic) reactions to components in the vaccine.

If you are at all concerned about potential side effects, please seek medical advice from your pharmacist or doctor.
